

ditonal Factors

d

te

Б

INCOME

those who lived in a household making $100K or more reported the highest positive workplace well-being.

> ° ∱

Lower income work women were less li have an employer enacted a policy to employees' overall being in the last 12

In addition to workplace factors, lower-income employees literation and the second literation of the second literation of the second second second second second second literation of the second secon stressors that can contribute to burnout, such as f nancial stress, mental health concerns and physical health concerns.

DEMOGRAPHICS

Other groups that were more likely to report feeling burned out often or always included: Working parents, younger employees, lower income (<$50K) workers and LGBTQIA+ workers.

> 38% of employees feel there is no one at their company who can relate to their personal life experiences, especially Black and

Hispanic workers, parents, LGBTQIA+ workers, frontline workers and lower income workers.